

Dr. Ellington,

You will remember my last letter to you in 1996, when I gave you information regarding your current Project. I see that you have relocated the subject to this so called Dark Island Facility, and I must congratulate you on keeping the secret for as long as you have.

I know that you have been curious about my identity. This is not relevant, and you should continue to concentrate on your work. Knowing who I am would not help you. It may in fact divert your focus at this time, when you need it the most.

There are currently new security staff on their way to the Facility. You may wonder how I know this, but rest assured, your current encryption methods are fine, I just have skills that ensure that I am always up to date with your activities.

I am writing to warn you that the new security staff may not be all that they appear to be. A sequence of events that began when the Project was shut down is now nearing completion. You are now in more danger than before, and the last, best hope for saving all the Variations will soon be in your grasp.

All being well, there will be one final message before the Convergence.

Best Wishes,

A Friend.
